The goal is to keep all students engaged in pursuit of a high school diploma. Mr. Rauenzahn reviewed existing programs as well as three specific components now being considered by staff:
  - Maryland’s Tomorrow/AdvancePath Academy (MT/APA) – an in-school alternative to be located at Chesapeake High School
  - Secondary Academic Intervention Model (SAIM) – a one year reading and math alternative center model
  - Woodstock Program – an eleventh and twelfth grade vocational/trades partnership program

Mr. Hayden requested statistics and successes on the Woodstock Program.

Dr. Hayman commented that:

- Alternative schools tend not to be preventive
- Programs are divided based on equality rather than necessity
- Locating reading and math teachers for this recommendation may be difficult
- While the system should continue to support alternative programs, additional information should be collected (i.e., cost effectiveness) to ensure the needs of the school system are being met.

Dr. Hairston stated these alternative initiatives are to help students who have not passed the MSA or HSA. He also noted that there is a phase-in plan to examine the Woodstock program.

Ms. Johnson asked why students in BCPS drop out. Mr. Rauenzahn responded there are several reasons: lack of success in school, lack of interest, feelings of disenfranchisement, and lack of support. Ms. Shillman expressed safety concerns about student safety and inquired about the SAIM program beginning on the east side of the county. Mr. Rauenzahn stated that one issue is that alternative schools only have 75 seats. With the expansion of SAIM, BCPS could expand the current alternative schools.

Ms. Harris expressed concern with the Woodstock program. Mr. Rauenzahn stated Woodstock is a two-year program and is currently not part of any funding. He noted that the primary program being reviewed is SAIM.

Ms. O'Hare asked what grades would be utilizing the SAIM program. Mr. Rauenzahn responded grades six through ten with a class size between 20-25 students.

Mr. Parker asked whether a profile/guideline has been developed for the model teacher necessary for these programs. Mr. Rauenzahn responded in the negative; however, he added that during the interview process, the school system would be looking for "extraordinary" individuals for these programs.

Mr. Janssen asked how these proposed programs would mesh with current programs. Mr. Rauenzahn responded AVID would be used. He noted that the APA program uses a computer-assisted mastery learning delivery system along with direct teacher instruction. Mr. Janssen inquired about the method of obtaining a diploma at Woodstock. According to Mr. Rauenzahn, the Woodstock program is approved by MSDE; however, students would get a "credit" high school diploma at Woodstock. Mr. Rauenzahn noted that BCPS would place it curriculum at Woodstock.
