

INSTRUCTION

Supplementary Materials

Free and inexpensive supplementary materials offered by business and other organizations include exhibits, books, pamphlets, charts, maps, samples, posters, films, slides, graphs, recipes, etc. Such materials offered to schools vary widely in their educational value and good taste in advertising. Teachers shall use them with discrimination, after first consulting with the department chairman or the principal and determining that the material will enrich or enliven the curriculum. Materials which contain direct sales pressure, objectionable propaganda, or excessive or offensive advertising shall be rejected.

Teachers shall exercise care concerning the reproduction and subsequent use of copyrighted material.
